

Brian is an avid musician who was recently diagnosed with a glioma, which was discovered when he began experiencing weakness in his arm while playing. He describes himself as an artist at his core and wishes to incorporate music into his treatment journey. Brian is married with two teenage children. He is concerned about not having much longer to live and the effect his illness is having on his family. His children have been receiving support through therapy sessions and Brian is making a conscious effort to be as open with them as possible. He requests that his healthcare providers are upfront with him regarding how his treatment is progressing, as if things are not going well he wishes to spend his remaining time travelling with his family in Europe.