

CPC

DOB: 11/4

CPC shared that she has as long history and relationship with grief and loss, as she left her mother to breast cancer when she was 21. CPC shared that she is a poet and that grief and joy are always together. She went on to share that because of this loss, she seeks out authentic relationships. She shared that she works really hard to foster those authentic connections, and at this juncture of her life, she does not need anyone in her life who cannot “show up for me!”

CPC shared that the most important people in her life are her husband of seven years and her five-year-old daughter. CPC shared that she does not want her daughter to be afraid while she fights this disease. She shared that her Puerto Rican Culture is very important to her and dancing. In fact, CPC shared that she views dancing as poetry through movement and when she is not dancing, then she is sad.
