Patient Dignity Question (PDQ)

MR, born on April 13, is a deeply creative individual whose passions for painting and journaling have been integral to her sense of self. Unfortunately, the physical toll of her chemotherapy treatments have left her feeling exhausted, slowly stripping away her ability to engage in these very significant activities. This fatigue has not only affected her artistic expression, but has also made it difficult for her to be fully present for her children, which really brings on a profound sadness to her being.

As we explored this challenging experience, near the end of our interview, MR expressed a desire to combine her love of art with her passion for motherhood by creating a hand cast with her children. This project would allow her to create meaningful, lasting legacy that celebrates both her artistic spirit and her connection to her loved ones. Supporting MR in regaining her energy and the resources needed to pursue her interests would significantly enhance her emotional, physical, and spiritual well-being. This would not only help her reconnect with what she has described as her true self, but also strengthen the deeply important bond she shares with her children.
